

Attwater's Prairie-Chicken

The Attwater's Prairie-Chicken is an endangered subspecies of the Greater Prairie-Chicken. Males and females look very different; the male has elongated feathers at the side of the head that look like ears when erect. Males also have reddish-orange air sacs on the side of the neck that are inflated during courtship displays.

